Downloading drivers for your computer is only part of the equation when it comes to keeping your computer secure. For that reason, we've assembled a comprehensive collection of programs that will scan your computer on a regular basis. There are three groups of programs: pre, mid and post exposure. Pre exposure. System Tools Pre Post Exposure. Display and Graphics Tools. Security Tools. Monitor Tools. Over time, we'll add more programs to each of the groups. I assume you know about the three programs you need to get in the Pre exposure group. The over all point of this is that Windows 7 security is similar to Windows 8. For a comprehensive program for Windows 7, check out the Carrying the Torch from A-Z Labs. It comes with an offline scan and a log. How does it work? There are several Windows 7 security programs. The output is a file that contains the different security settings. This will be important later. There is another product by A-Z Labs called Security Totalizer. If you prefer to use a multi-scanner and a log, I think you'll like Security Guard from Bright Discovery. It's a free download that has a multi-scanner and a log. If you are using a PC with an SSD, here is another version that does not assume you have an SSD. It's the same price. You can check out our software review page and if you want a multi-scanner check out our review of Tom's Hardware. What if you are using Windows 8.1? You may like to check out the comprehensive security package called Trend Micro Smart Security. You can try it for free. If you want the free version, but the Windows 8.1 issue is resolved, you can download Security Essentials plus. You can download it here. Some security programs have a setup wizard. If you look in the suite, you can see the installer. Most of the time, you should be able to run the setup directly from the download. Of course, you can run the setup wizard after you've run the install f678ea9f9e
